Legislations:

- 1995. LXVI. act 22. § (1) paragraph: Upon request, containing the subject to be researched, any natural person may have free of charge access to archives, or may obtain at his own cost copies of records released for inspection, and kept in public archives, created after 1 May 1990, or archives older than thirty years from the calendar year of their creation, archives that were created before 2 May 1990, if older than fifteen years from the calendar year of their creation – with the exceptions in Sections 24 and 25 – as well as without any time limitation to archives, which have already been made public, and/or the content of which anyone may become familiar with, in accordance with 2011. CXII. act.
- 1995. LXVI. act 24. (1) Unless an Act otherwise provides, archives containing personal data shall be disclosed for access by anyone thirty years after the year of the data subject's decease. If the year of death is unknown, protection period shall be ninety years from the birth of the subject, and when neither the date of birth nor of death is known, it shall be sixty years from the creation of the record held by the archives.
- 1995. LXVI. act 24/A § (1) paragraph: For scientific purposes, even before the expiry of protection period specified in Section 24, subsection (1), access to archives containing personal data may be permitted for the researcher of a country ensuring equivalent protection of personal data, supposing that 30 and 15 years respectively, specified in Section 22, subsection (1), have expired. Access may be authorized, if
